

Haunted New York City, The New York Village Halloween Parade

If you are planning a Halloween excursion for your next vacation getaway, you absolutely have to put New York City on your list of options. New York City is a place of extremism. Everything is done to the fullest potential possible. With that in mind, you can only imagine how a typical New York City Halloween would be.

The main aspect of New York's Halloween experience is, without a doubt, the New York's Village Halloween Parade. For over thirty years this parade has been held throughout the city streets. Everyone loves a good parade, particularly on All Hallows Eve! What, you might ask, makes this parade different from any other?

The New York's Village Halloween Parade is different in that you don't merely have to stand by and watch the floats go by. Your entire family can actually be in the parade itself! New York City urges visitors as well as citizens to design themselves an original costume and take part in the parade. On Halloween night everyone that wishes to be a part of this huge annual event meets on Sixth Avenue in Greenwich Village (directly across from the Arts Center) at six-thirty P.M.

Once there, you will find yourself surrounded by ghosts, goblins, vampires and every other horrid creature that mankind has ever feared. You can even design your own float if you would like, though you have to have special permission on that. Next, you begin your trek throughout the city of New York with your creepy ghoulish comrades. The streets will be lined with hundreds of thousands of citizens and visitors cheering you on!

This event is known as the world's biggest public participatory event. You will find that you are walking with individuals from other states, other countries, and the grand city of New York itself. This is a once in a lifetime to experience this great city under the veil of the scariest night of the year, becoming one with New Yorkers and fellow countrymen alike. If drama, costumes, spooks and specters really get your blood pumping, visit New York City for the ultimate in Halloween getaways!
